CHARACTERISTICS OF CONVENTION

Notable Absence of Many of the Old Conservative Leaders.

NEW FACES IN EVIDENCE

pecial From a Staff Correspondent KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 5.- "We recice tonight and tomorrow fight," said an old democratic rustler as he left the Conrention Hall last night after the great lemonstration provoked by Chairman Rich rdson's reference to Bryan at the close of his speech. That is what they are doing, ejoicing and fighting and apparently reolding in the fight. The brass bands, with heir eternal repetitions, are not necessary own. It is hot in every sense, physically, metionally and metaphorically. Prickly heat and loss of rest add to the political irritation, and a shouting, rollicking Fourth of July crowd contribute to the picturequeness of the scene.

The convention is in full swing, and in ome respects it is the most notable conention that ever happened. It seems to vention that ever happened. It seems to have just happened not to have been designed. The medley of irritation and elation, of scheming contention and reckless indifference rivals a cowboy picnic. While the leaders are engaged in an almost life and death struggle over the politics of party and state the great floating crowd runs amuck in its bubbling and bolsterous hilarity. The great mass of the delegates seem to have but one definite idea, and that is to have but one definite idea, and that is that they are for Bryan and that Bryan is going somehow, they don't know or care how, to lead them to victory, and that there is going to be another hot time in the old town when that comes about.

The leaders on both sides of the contest and contest there is of the old-fashioned sort, are as cool and calculating, and the floaters are rollickingly indifferent. The which chills you in the wind and boils the convention is like the Kansas City climate, which chills you in the wind and boils the very blood in your veins when you get out of the draft, with only the matter of turning a corner to make the change. The demonstration over the mention of Bryan's name in the convention last night was almost as great as that which in '06 followed his famous speech of the "crown of thorns and cross of gold."

In size of the assemblage and the scenic surroundings it surpassed that memorable occasion. To picture the scene to the mind's eye it must be realized that the convention hall is the largest in which a national convention was ever held, and is so arranged that the entire assemblage is before the eye at one time, without columns or anything else to interrupt the vision, and 20,000 people can actually look into each other's eyes, so that there is almost a transferrence of thought and emotion. Democratic assemblages are by nature emotional, and the western spirit of the local population adds a dash of energetic life to there. The same crowd that made such a demonstration for Bryan last night came near being led into a frenzied acclaim for Hill corters who had been packed in the galleries back of the press seats. The intent of the Hill demonstration was intended to be hostile to Bryan. This shows how little realization the general mass of the convention have of the character of the contest which is being seriously waged.

The Same Old Contest.

The Same Old Contest. The real contest is a struggle for suprem cy in the party between the same elements Though many of the familiar leaders who esisted free silver and Bryanism in '96 are now absent, the issue is the same, though the situation is reversed. Then the element represented by Cleveland, Whitney, Gor-man, Hill, Flower, Croker and Harrity was man. Hill, Flower, Croker and Harrity was overwhelmed while trying to hold its own against the ideas that had come up like a tide from the common people. Now the survivors of that deluge, with only a few of the old leaders, are trying to press back the tide, and though they have shown almost supernatural skill and strength, they cannot succeed. They are but few who are engaged in the effort, and they are not in perfect harmony among themselves. They desire to accomplish the same thing, but there is the enmity between Leader Hill and Leader Croker, and there are weaknesses on tee on credentials of the democratic national committee late yesterday afternoon decided to recommend the admission of both the Norris and Holmead delegations, giving each half a vote in the convention This action was taken after a hearing of the case which covered the grounds gone over before the subcommittee of the national committee previously, and reported in The Star.

The absence of figures familiar in oldtime democratic conventions is conspicuous.

Final Result of Contest Between Dis-trict Democratic Delegations.

Messrs. Norris, Slater and Clark made about the same arguments which were presented on the first day. When it came to a vote 48 members of the committee voted against seating Norris, while six voted aye. Then on a viva voce vote the committee refused to seat the Holmead delegation. This brought the question back to the original proposition, which evidently the committee had in mind from the outset, to seat both factions, and this motion was adopted on a viva voce vote.

This action will have important bearing upon the question of national committeeman. There was a tie, and the selection will devolve upon the full national committee. The Holmead delegation will make a strong fight to have one of its number appointed, and there is no doubt that Mr. Norris will have a lead of the control of th ber appointed, and there is no doubt that Mr. Norris will have a lively contest on his hands.

SCENES IN THE HALL LAST NIGHT.

Special From a Staff Correspondent.

CONVENTION HALL, Kansas City, Mo., were lost in the shadows of the overhanging galleries. Probably two-thirds of the audience was composed of ladies, and their light summer costumes were bright and dazzling to witness by the scores of great are lights suspended from the beams. The brilliant colors of the national bunting in the decorations gave just enough of warmth to harmonize the scene. The music, the cheering and the enthusiasm, together with the lively good humor of the crowd, vivified the atmosphere of the hall, and all the surroundings were full of life and animation. It was a democratic audience in all senses of the word. Any old fellow in the crowd felt at liberty to fire remarks and interject suggestions at any stage of the proceedings, of the word. Any old fellow in the crowd felt at liberty to fire remarks and interject suggestions at any stage of the proceedings, no matter how much they might embarrass the speaker of the moment.

The speeches of Altgeld of Illinois and Richardson of Tennessee were the events of the evening and were received with appreciation by the audience. Altgeld is still a powerful speaker, although he is broken in health, and he swayed the great audience at times to vehement outbursts. Representative Richardson got a Bryan demonstration at the end of his speech. When he concluded he mentioned the name of the democratic champion. That was enough. The audience had not had a real big whoop since afternoon, and off it went. The intoxication spread rapidly, and for nearly an hour the assembled multitude enjoyed a good old democratic love feast of hurrahs and hat waving. Everybody stood up on benches and chairs and shouted at the top of his voice. Hats were thrown in the air, the band played, and those of the auditors who were too hoarse to halloo any more hummed the chorus. The delegates were as wild as any one else. They clambered about the rostrum with the placards of their states and then joined in a grand triumphal procession around the hall with the placarding to the air of "The Stars and Stripes Forever." After that they returned to the speaker's rostrum and nearly broke their necks each trying to raise his state placard higher than the other. The chairman of the state of Washington delegation then clambered his way to the highest gallery. The tumuit continued so long that it was evident no business could be transacted, and in sheer desperation the convention was compelled to adjourn.
